Discussion

Integration of practices and processes is vital in today's business. Such integration allows the organization to achieve its goals while improving efficiency. BCX Consulting assists a company in the integration of practices and processes. The assistance is scalable based on the organization's needs. BCX Consulting services result from more than forty years' experience in product development and regulatory compliance including responsibility as Lead Administrator for a FAA Type and Production Certification organization.

Many organizations focus on processes associated with making a physical product. Traditional processes for the production personnel outline the manufacturing sequence, what tools are used, the product finish, and packaging. Organizations also have knowledge workers in addition to the production personnel. Knowledge workers develop procedures for customer interface, administrative activities, and governmental or regulatory compliance. These procedures are just as important as manufacturing processes. Many times the procedures created and used by knowledge workers are either poorly documented or not documented at all. Some or all of the knowledge is lost when employees leave.
